he opens the door to the next chapter of life. God is no one's debtor, a missionary couple once said to me. God uses the challenges of life to grow us up and to help us to rely on his daily bread rather than our superficial abundance. We pray that God will protect our hearts and give us courage as we embrace whatever transition that is ahead. God bless you, especially if you are also encountering change and transformation.

A FEW WORDS FROM ME

Dear Friends,

I thought I would write a few lines about transition and growth. September is often a time of transition. Children are ready to start new challenges, often moving schools or going onto College or University. September is also a time to take stock so that the new academic year can be fresh and dynamic. However, it is often the case that the wealthier we become the more we try and control life so that we are not confronted with the challenge that change brings. Change for some is terrifying because the old 'usual' ways of doing things are challenged and our fragility is exposed. For many in our world that sort of change is merely 'normal' and other coping mechanisms are in place instead. Jesus calls his friends into a life that is far more dynamic than most of us realise or are willing to entertain. Jesus challenges us not to put our trust in earthly things, worldly systems, and even questions us about the priorities we have for our nuclear families.

The life of faith, unlike the life of control that we are seduced into yearning for in the west, is the willingness to step out and go and be different. As we step out in faith, I know we will be met with Jesus, who says to each of us, 'my grace is sufficient for you.' That doesn't mean we won't have turbulent times ahead; life always has stressful aspects and it pushes our love and patience to the limit. However, I have a firm conviction that when God makes it clear that it is time to move on, then
